1 OPINION

2 WRAY, Judge.

3 {1} Plaintiff Jesus Moreno appeals the district court’s determination that the 4 personal injury complaint against Ranger Energy Services, LLC and Wildcat Oil 5 Tools, LLC (collectively, Defendants) was untimely filed. Plaintiff maintains that 6 the district court improperly dismissed the case, because the savings statute, NMSA 7 1978, § 37-1-14 (1880), applied to deem the present case a continuation of a first-8 filed, but dismissed, Texas case. We conclude, however, that under the 9 circumstances of the present case, the Texas case was untimely as a matter of law 10 on the face of the pleadings and the motion responses, and as a result, the subsequent 11 case filed in New Mexico cannot be “deemed a continuation of the first,” expired 12 case. Id. We therefore affirm.

13 BACKGROUND

14 {2} Plaintiff, a Texas resident, first filed suit in Texas state court in July 2020 and 15 sought damages allegedly arising from injuries sustained in a 2017 oil field accident 16 that occurred in New Mexico. Plaintiff alleged that Defendants “managed, owned, 17 and operated” the site and that the case was “governed by New Mexico law.” 18 Defendant Wildcat Oil Tools, LLC filed a motion for summary judgment, which 19 argued that the two-year Texas statute of limitations applied and the case should be 20 dismissed because it was filed after the Texas statute of limitations expired. The 1 Texas court granted the summary judgment motion, and the matter was dismissed 2 with prejudice in January 2021. Within six months, Plaintiff filed suit again against 3 Defendants in New Mexico. Defendants moved to dismiss, this time based on the 4 expiration of the three-year New Mexico statute of limitations, which by the time 5 the New Mexico lawsuit was filed, had also already expired. Plaintiff argued that the 6 savings statute applied and because the New Mexico case—the present case—was 7 filed within six months of the Texas dismissal, the New Mexico case was a 8 continuation of the Texas case and therefore timely filed. The district court agreed 9 with Defendants and dismissed. Plaintiff appeals.

10 DISCUSSION

11 {3} On appeal, Plaintiff renews the argument that the New Mexico action was 12 timely under the savings statute. Section 37-1-14 states that “[i]f, after the 13 commencement of an action, the plaintiff fail[s] therein for any cause, except 14 negligence in its prosecution, and a new suit be commenced within six months 15 thereafter, the second suit shall, for the purposes herein contemplated, be deemed a 16 continuation of the first.” We have explained that “when a plaintiff fails to exercise 17 due diligence in the prosecution of [their] case, we will find that that suit has failed 18 due to negligence in the prosecution, and the plaintiff cannot benefit from the six-19 month time for refiling contained in Section 37-1-14.” Foster v. Sun Healthcare 20 Grp., Inc., 2012-NMCA-072, ¶ 8, 284 P.3d 389 (alteration, internal quotation marks,

1 and citation omitted). Plaintiff asserts that the New Mexico savings statute should 2 apply to remedy any timing defect in the second suit, the record demonstrates no 3 negligent prosecution, and to the extent this Court relies on Barbeau v. Hoppenrath, 4 2001-NMCA-077, 131 N.M. 124, 33 P.3d 675 to affirm, Barbeau should be 5 overruled. The parties agree our standard for review is de novo. See Amica Mut. Ins.
6 Co. v. McRostie (hereinafter Amica), 2006-NMCA-046, ¶ 13, 139 N.M. 486, 134
7 P.3d 773; Barbeau, 2001-NMCA-077, ¶ 6. We begin with Barbeau.

8 {4} In Barbeau, the plaintiffs first filed suit in Oregon and alleged that the federal 9 district court had diversity jurisdiction over the parties to resolve a dispute involving 10 an injury that occurred in New Mexico. 2001-NMCA-077, ¶¶ 1, 5. The facts set forth 11 in the complaint, however, defeated diversity jurisdiction, and the complaint was 12 dismissed. Id. ¶¶ 3-4. The plaintiffs refiled the case in New Mexico and argued that 13 the savings statute applied. Id. ¶ 5. The district court and this Court disagreed. Id.
14 ¶¶ 1, 6. We reasoned that the plaintiffs had been negligent in the prosecution of the 15 case, because their own federal complaint showed they had knowledge of facts that 16 defeated diversity jurisdiction and personal jurisdiction, and they did not show any 17 “innocent mistake or an erroneous guess at an elusive jurisdictional fact known only 18 to the defendants or any other circumstances that might serve to excuse what 19 otherwise appear[ed] clearly to be negligence.” Id. ¶ 16. The Foster Court later 20 described the Barbeau holding as, “because the plaintiffs failed to file their first case

1 in a forum that they could have reasonably believed had the power to decide the 2 matter, summary judgment for the defendant was proper.” Foster, 2012-NMCA-3 072, ¶ 10.

4 {5} We have previously declined to “automatically transfer” the reasoning from 5 Barbeau to facts that do not implicate subject matter jurisdiction. Amica, 2006-6 NMCA-046, ¶ 16. In Amica, we noted the “valid distinction to be made between 7 filing a complaint that on its face defeats subject matter jurisdiction,” as was the case 8 in Barbeau, and carelessly “filing an action without a thorough investigation as to 9 whether venue is proper,” which described the facts in Amica. 2006-NMCA-046, 10 ¶ 16. Instead, the Amica Court balanced the waivable nature of venue mistakes 11 against “the policy favoring access to judicial resolution of disputes” and concluded 12 that the venue mistake was not negligence in the prosecution as contemplated by 13 Section 37-1-14. Amica, 2006-NMCA-046, ¶ 17. Plaintiff argues that similarly here, 14 expiration of the statute of limitations in a civil case is a waivable defense and not a 15 jurisdictional matter, and therefore, the reasoning in Barbeau should not apply.
16 While we recognize a distinction between subject matter jurisdiction and a statutory 17 limitation period, we cannot agree that under these circumstances, it is enough to 18 categorize the statute of limitations as a waivable defense and apply the savings 19 statute. To explain, we provide a brief explanation of the applicable Texas limitation 20 period.

1 {6} Texas law permits a Texas citizen to bring an action for damages resulting 2 from an injury that occurred in another state provided that certain criteria are met, 3 including that “the action is begun in [Texas] within the time provided by the laws 4 of [Texas] for beginning the action.” Tex. Civ. Prac. & Remedies Code Ann.
5 § 71.031(a)(2) (West 1997). Texas courts have explained that “Section 71.031(a) is 6 not a jurisdictional bar, but it is a statutory requirement or prerequisite that affects a 7 plaintiff’s right to obtain relief and should be met before a trial court proceeds.”
8 Stevenson v. Ford Motor Co., 608 S.W.3d 109, 120 (Tex. Ct. App. 2020). Texas law 9 contemplates that the law of another state may apply to the claim according to a fact-10 based “most significant relationship” test—but not until after it can be established 11 that the claim was brought within the time established by Texas law. Id. at 121-23 12 (internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiff’s complaint alleged that the claim was 13 “governed by New Mexico law” but made no allegation or argument that the claim 14 was brought within the time established by Texas law. Thus, on its face Plaintiff’s 15 claim was untimely, and Plaintiff made no effort in subsequent pleadings to establish 16 any facts that would justify deeming the complaint to be timely under Texas law.
17 See Yurcic v. City of Gallup, 2013-NMCA-039, ¶ 10, 298 P.3d 500 (“As a general 18 rule, issues as to whether a claim has been timely filed or whether good cause exists 19 for delay in filing an action are questions of fact, and such issues only become issues 20 of law when the facts are undisputed.” (internal quotation marks and citation

1 omitted)); see also Butler v. Deutsche Morgan Grenfell, Inc., 2006-NMCA-084, 2 ¶ 28, 140 N.M. 111, 140 P.3d 532 (holding that “even at the motion to dismiss stage, 3 a plaintiff must have alleged in the complaint, or must respond to the motion to 4 dismiss with, factual allegations that, if proved, would support application of the 5 discovery rule”).

6 {7} It is under these circumstances that Plaintiff asks us to disregard Barbeau and 7 conclude simply that the statute of limitations is a waivable defense, Plaintiff 8 diligently pursued the claim, the New Mexico statute of limitations had not expired 9 when the claim was filed in Texas, and the plain language of Section 37-1-14 does 10 not require that the first action be timely commenced. We agree with Plaintiff that 11 we should not “automatically” apply the Barbeau reasoning because a valid 12 distinction exists “between filing a complaint that on its face defeats subject matter 13 jurisdiction” and filing an expired complaint. See Amica, 2006-NMCA-046, ¶ 16.
14 While “[s]ubject matter jurisdiction gives a court power and authority to act,” id.
15 ¶ 17, limitation periods are generally designed “to protect [the] defendants from 16 having to defend against stale claims and to ensure that [the] plaintiffs timely pursue 17 claims,” Est. of Brice v. Toyota Motor Corp., 2016-NMSC-018, ¶ 35, 373 P.3d 977.
18 The present case, however, does not involve the sort of careless prefiling 19 investigation at issue in Amica, which this Court was willing to countenance when 20 balanced against the “policy favoring access to judicial resolution of disputes.”

1 2006-NMCA-046, ¶¶ 16-17. Instead, Plaintiff filed the untimely complaint in Texas, 2 alleged New Mexico law would apply, did not allege that the complaint satisfied the 3 Texas limitation period, and provided no basis to conclude that the Texas limitation 4 period had not expired.

5 {8} Rather than simply applying Barbeau at the outset, we take our cue from 6 Amica and Foster and consider whether the error under these circumstances 7 constitutes negligent prosecution based on the policy considerations implicated by 8 the expiration of the statute of limitations, the purposes of the savings statute, and 9 our preference in favor of “access to judicial resolution of disputes.” Amica, 2006-10 NMCA-046, ¶ 17; Foster, 2012-NMCA-072, ¶ 7 (“Further, New Mexico’s policy 11 favoring access to judicial resolutions of disputes is embodied in Section 37-1-14, 12 and when determining whether a plaintiff has been negligent in the prosecution of 13 their suit, we balance the plaintiff’s error against this policy.”).

14 {9} As we have noted, limitation periods offer “basic fairness” to defendants by 15 “encouraging promptness in instituting a claim, suppressing stale or fraudulent 16 claims, and avoiding inconvenience, [and] encourag[ing] plaintiffs to bring their 17 actions while the evidence is still available and fresh.” Roberts v. Sw. Cmty. Health 18 Servs., 1992-NMSC-042, ¶ 25, 114 N.M. 248, 837 P.2d 442. Limitation periods also 19 “reflect a policy decision regarding what constitutes an adequate period of time for 20 a person of ordinary diligence to pursue [a] claim.” Id. ¶ 26 (internal quotation marks

1 and citation omitted). Plaintiff’s late filing in Texas and subsequent filing in New 2 Mexico defeated each of these stated purposes—Plaintiff argued no need for 3 additional time and no equitable basis to toll the limitation period, while the claim 4 and evidence to support it became increasingly stale.

5 {10} Similarly, deeming the present case to be a continuation of the Texas case 6 does not serve the purposes of the savings statute. Section 37-1-14 has been 7 described as having “the effect of preventing a statute of limitations from barring a 8 suit where the original suit was brought in a timely fashion but the statute ran before 9 the second suit was filed.” Amica, 2006-NMCA-046, ¶ 1. Our Supreme Court has 10 similarly stated, “The statute is a tolling statute, which operates to suspend the 11 running of an otherwise applicable statute of limitations when an action is timely 12 commenced and later dismissed, except when the dismissal is based on a failure to 13 prosecute the action with reasonable diligence.” Gathman-Matotan Architects &
14 Planners, Inc. v. State, Dep’t of Fin. & Admin. (hereinafter Gathman-Matotan), 15 1990-NMSC-013, ¶ 8, 109 N.M. 492, 787 P.2d 411; see also Benally v. Pigman, 16 1967-NMSC-148, ¶ 14, 78 N.M. 189, 429 P.2d 648 (noting that the savings statute 17 applied because the first dismissal was “not based upon the discretionary power of 18 the court to dismiss stale claims, nor was there any finding or conclusion that the 19 [first dismissal] was by reason of the negligence of [the] plaintiffs in prosecuting 20 that cause”). Because the Texas limitation period had expired before Plaintiff’s

1 action was filed, the commencement of the Texas action in Texas could not toll the 2 running of the New Mexico limitation period under the savings statute—the 3 expiration of the applicable Texas limitation period barred the action as untimely 4 before it was filed in Texas and there was therefore no valid action to save in New 5 Mexico after the New Mexico limitation period expired. See § 37-1-14; U.S. Fire
6 Ins. Co. v. Aeronautics, Inc., 1988-NMSC-051, ¶ 5, 107 N.M. 320, 757 P.2d 790 7 (describing Section 37-1-4 as a tolling statute).

8 {11} The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals came to a similar conclusion in DeVargas 9 v. Montoya, 796 F.2d 1245, 1247 (10th Cir. 1986), overruled on other grounds by 10 Newcomb v. Ingle, 827 F.2d 675 (10th Cir. 1987), in which a plaintiff’s case was 11 dismissed as untimely from state court and the plaintiff refiled the “same basic 12 complaint” in federal court. The DeVargas plaintiff argued in part that the second 13 suit was a continuation of the first and the limitation period was tolled by the savings 14 statute. Id. at 1250. The Court disagreed and explained, “As previously indicated, 15 we recognize as valid and binding the New Mexico judgment that [the] plaintiff had 16 nothing to continue [because the] suit in state court was time-barred.” Id.

17 {12} Plaintiff contends that DeVargas is partially overruled, outdated, nonbinding, 18 distinguishable, and unpersuasive. The DeVargas Court, Plaintiff argues, did not 19 have the benefit of our Supreme Court’s decisions in U.S. Fire Insurance Co. and 20 Gathman-Matotan, which Plaintiff asserts explain “the meaning of the negligent-

1 prosecution exception in New Mexico.” Neither of those cases, however, set forth 2 principles that conflict with the reasoning of the DeVargas Court. To the contrary, 3 in Gathman-Matotan, our Supreme Court assumed that the savings statute applied 4 “when an action is timely commenced,” 1990-NMSC-013, ¶ 8, and in U.S. Fire
5 Insurance Co., the Court confirmed that Section 37-1-4 is a tolling statute, U.S. Fire
6 Ins. Co., 1988-NMSC-051, ¶ 5.

7 {13} Nor do the factual distinctions between the present case and DeVargas
8 diminish its persuasiveness. Plaintiff observes that in DeVargas, the plaintiff’s first 9 suit was time-barred by New Mexico law, 796 F.2d at 1248, while in the present 10 case, the New Mexico limitation period had not yet expired when the original lawsuit 11 was filed in Texas. Plaintiff does not acknowledge that the Texas lawsuit was already 12 barred by Texas law and that by the time the suit was filed in New Mexico, the New 13 Mexico limitation period had also expired. Though DeVargas considered only one 14 statute of limitations—the New Mexico statute—and in the present case two 15 limitation periods are at issue, in both cases the original suit was expired and the 16 plaintiff attempted to rely on the first expired suit to deem the second suit timely. As 17 the DeVargas Court observed, “[t]he savings statute could not resurrect what never 18 existed.” Id. at 1250. Under the present circumstances, we similarly conclude that 19 the savings statute cannot resurrect a suit that Plaintiff does not dispute was untimely 20 as a matter of Texas law when it was first filed in Texas. See State v. Kerby, 2007-

1 NMSC-014, ¶ 11, 141 N.M. 413, 156 P.3d 704 (observing that the expiration of the 2 statute of limitations is a question of law where the “facts relevant to a statute of 3 limitations issue are not in dispute” (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

4 {14} In light of all of this, we reject Plaintiff’s position that the Texas litigation was 5 diligently pursued, and we decline Plaintiff’s invitation to overrule Barbeau’s 6 conclusion that “the plaintiff must choose a forum that arguably has the power to 7 decide the matter.” See Barbeau, 2001-NMCA-077, ¶ 15. The present case does not 8 involve whether either forum had the power to decide the matter but instead whether 9 Plaintiff’s claim, which was indisputably expired when it was filed, can be saved by 10 Section 37-1-14.

11 {15} Balancing the policies underlying the statute of limitations, the savings 12 statute, and access to judicial resolution, we conclude that Plaintiff was negligent in 13 the prosecution of the Texas case. See Amica, 2006-NMCA-046, ¶ 17. We endeavor 14 to apply the savings statute “liberally in furtherance of [its] purpose—to enable 15 controversies to be decided upon substantive questions rather than upon procedural 16 technicalities.” Foster, 2012-NMCA-072, ¶ 7 (internal quotation marks and citation 17 omitted). Nevertheless, the facts of the present case do not suggest a mere 18 “procedural technicalit[y].” See id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).
19 Even though the New Mexico limitation period had not expired when the Texas 20 action was filed, as a matter of Texas law, the New Mexico limitation period did not

1 apply to the action, which was barred by the Texas statute of limitations. Thus, 2 Plaintiff has not demonstrated that the Texas filing was an “innocent mistake or an 3 erroneous guess at an elusive jurisdictional fact known only to the defendants or any 4 other circumstance that might serve to excuse what otherwise appear[ed] clearly to 5 be negligence.” See Barbeau, 2001-NMCA-077, ¶ 16. We have already explained 6 that the policies underlying both limitation periods and the savings statute counsel 7 against the application of Section 37-1-14, and as a result, all three policies weigh 8 against application of the savings statute in the present case.

9 {16} We emphasize the limited nature of this holding—we have applied the 10 Barbeau reasoning because it was warranted by the balance of policy considerations 11 in the context of the present case. Just as Foster—which involved a superficially 12 similar fact pattern to Barbeau—did not reach the same result as Barbeau because 13 the facts were different, so too could another claim survive under different facts.
14 Regardless, under these circumstances, we must conclude that first pursuing the 15 claim in Texas was a “failure to prosecute the action with reasonable diligence” 16 under the circumstances, and the New Mexico savings statute does not apply. See 17 Gathman-Matotan, 1990-NMSC-013, ¶ 8.
